“Chasey was my big brother, my only full biological sibling, and the only sibling i grew up with. we were 17 months apart, and he was once the best friend i'll ever have in this life his life was extremely hard and toxicly unfair, the ones who were supposed to love him most consistently let him down. he didn't deserve a single second of the atrocities he'd endured, he was once a joyous, wonder filled little boy, with eyes so big bright and full of adventure. he was always looking around the corner for whatever cool and possibly dangerous adventure life had in store for him he was once so full of life, vivacity, curiosity, hope, and aspiration for the future, but those around him who were supposed to love him the most, let him down in the worst most evil way imaginable.

he loved the outdoors, he was such an adrenaline junkie, he took me on all kinds of wonderful adventures while we were growing up.

it feels like he left me here, but i know he transcended into a way better more beautiful and peaceful place, and now he gets to be with our grandma and our mema, waiting for us to come join him up there, while looking over us, protecting and guiding us.

one of my biggest regrets is that he never got the opportunity to meet his only neice, and his unborn neice/nephew that i'm currently carrying.

he's such a monumental loss for everyone around him, and it's beyond heartbreaking that he really never even got a chance to experience life.

i'm the only living breathing being that carries 100% the same dna and genetic code as my big brother, and it's my soul mission in this life to make sure he's NEVER forgotten, and that i fit enough life into my one, for the both of us i love and miss you with all my heart and soul big brother, until we meet again 🖤🕊️

love always, sissy 📺📺

“Chase was a lovely man. I met him through business but enjoyed conversations with him about so many different things. Our love of nature and turtles. He was so young, too young. I wish his family and Alexis peace, love and light.
